1.1.3.3 When a critical part is established, a security search of the parts that could have been contaminated shall be carried out immediately before such a part is established in order to reasonably ensure that it does not contain prohibited articles. This provision shall be considered to be met for aircraft that are subject to an aircraft security search.

1.1.3.4 Whenever unscreened persons or passengers and crew members arriving from countries other than those listed in Attachment 4-B may have had access to critical parts, a security search of the parts that could have been contaminated shall be carried out as soon as possible in order to reasonably ensure that it does not contain prohibited articles.

Paragraph 1 shall be considered to be met for aircraft that are subject to an aircraft security search.

Paragraph 1 shall not apply when persons covered by subparagraph 1.3.2 and subparagraph 4.1.1.7 have had access to these parts.

When the human reviewer identifies such an object, its location shall be communicated to the screener for further search. In this case the human reviewer is to be considered as an integral part of the detection system.

A security scanner with automatic threat detection may consist of a detection system that automatically recognises metallic and non-metallic objects, distinct from the human skin carried on the body of the person screened. When the system identifies such an object, its location shall be indicated on a stick figure to the screener.

For the purposes of screening passengers, a security scanner shall meet the following standards.

- a) Security scanners shall detect and indicate by means of an alarm at least specified metallic and non-metallic items including explosives both individually and in combination,
